FOR six-and-a-half centuries Final Concords, otherwise known as Fines, were a most important method of transfer or settlement of real property in England. The normal procedure was as follows:—

An action, real or fictitious, was brought in the Court of Common Pleas; the parties being called plaintiff and deforciant, plaintiff and impediēt, or demandant and tenant, according to the nature of the plea; and an agreement was made for a consideration, and publicly proclaimed in succeeding terms. This agreement was engrossed in the form of an indenture of three parts; one of which, called the Foot of the Fine, was kept by the Court, while the two counterparts were given to the parties. The effect was to give the most perfect title possible.

FEET OF FINES FOR ESSEX.

These English Abstracts of the 'Feet of Fines for Essex' were made by the late Mr. R. C. Fowler, F.S.A., but owing to his sudden death they have not had the advantage of his final revision. The proofs have kindly been read by Mr. S. C. Ratcliff, M.A.

THE regnal years of Edward III. began on 25 January, in Hilary term, the return-days for which were the octave and quinzaine of Hilary (20 and 27 January) and the morrow and octave of the Purification (3 and 9 February). The term began on 23 January, or, if that fell on a Sunday, on the next day; but all days up to the quinzaine were reckoned as belonging to the octave of Hilary. This was therefore the only return-day that came at the end of the regnal year.

When there are two or more vendors, the names of the principal ones, whose heirs are mentioned, are given in italics.

An asterisk added to the number of a Fine means that the information in a defective Foot has been supplemented by aid of the Note.

FEET OF FINES FOR ESSEX.

PREFACE.

THE documents summarized in this volume belong to the class of triplicate records called 'Final Concords', otherwise known as Fines. Their form remained unchanged from 1195 until 1833, though the legal procedure concerning them did not continue stationary. Affording as they do 'the best illustrations that we have of medieval conveyancing', they are of considerable interest to students of English legal history; but this aspect was dealt with at some length nearly forty years ago, in the preface to the first volume of these abstracts. Moreover, since its publication further intensive study has been devoted to the subject, and reference may also be made to two recent volumes, namely, Feet of Fines, Edward I and Edward II, edited by R. B. Pugh (Wiltshire Archæological Society, 1939); and Surrey Feet of Fines, 1509-1558, edited by C. A. F. Meekings (Surrey Record Society, 1946). The first has a good account of the uses of Fines; the second gives a full description of the procedure of the Tudor period, which is not quite the same as the procedure of an earlier date, though the greater part of it applies, and a careful reading will show many of the differences. One of the differences is the proclamation of Fines in succeeding terms: it was not the practice of our period, being first ordered by statute 1 Richard III, cap. 7; this proved ineffective and the practice actually began in consequence of another act, 4 Henry VII, cap. 24.

It will therefore be sufficient to give here a brief and general account of Fines. At first they were related to real litigation, but after the fourteenth century they recorded fictitious suits brought to the Court of Common Pleas. The parties concerned were called plaintiff and deforciant, plaintiff and impediend, or demandant and tenant, according to the nature of the plea; and 'an agreement was made for a consideration, and (towards the end of the fifteenth century onwards) publicly proclaimed in succeeding terms'. This agreement was engrossed in the form of an indenture of three parts (see frontispiece to vol. I); two of which were delivered to the two parties in the suit respectively, while the third part or foot of the document, which was cut off in an indented line (hence the term 'indenture'), so as to tally with its counterparts, was kept by the Court. 'The effect was to give the most perfect title possible',

A facsimile of Fine 312, on page 64, is given as a frontispiece. It has been chosen because it concerns one of the chief holders of lands in the county and also shows a Fine dealing with several counties.

Fortunately, these Feet of Fines have been preserved in unbroken succession, and in consequence they are one of the chief sources of manorial and local history. Not only do they provide information concerning particular families and estates not to be found elsewhere, but they also contribute occasionally towards the ecclesiastical annals of a parish by supplying, for instance, the names of owners of the advowson and of unrecorded incumbents. It is obvious, therefore, that an elaborate and accurate index to a work of this kind is of the utmost importance to the student, and it is a cause for keen satisfaction that a task extending over ten years has at length been well and truly performed. Although the provision of an index was my responsibility, my share in it has been confined to securing the services of experts willing to undertake so laborious a piece of work, and to printing arrangements and so forth.

But with the completion of the volume a comprehensive tribute must be paid to the three scholars who have made its production possible. The Fines have been printed from abstracts prepared by the late Mr. Robert Copp Fowler, O.B.E., B.A., F.S.A., who with characteristic zeal left in manuscript (about 3,000 quarto pages) abstracts of Essex Fines ranging from 1327 to 1574, ready for publication. Mr. Fowler also read through the proofs of each part as it appeared and checked them with the original documents. On his death in 1929, the late Mr. Sidney Charles Ratcliff, I.S.O., M.A., who succeeded Mr. Fowler as a senior Assistant Keeper of the Public Records, and shared his interest and wishes regarding Essex Fines, undertook the exacting task of collation. All the eight parts previously issued of the present volume passed through his hands—the last in 1937, when the question of the Index had to be considered. It was computed that it would entail the writing of something like 27,000 slips, a formidable task which Mr. Ratcliff felt unable to enter upon. He offered to act as supervisor, however, and it was agreed that a professional archivist should be employed to write the slips. This work was completed early in 1939, at a cost of £26: 17: 6. The slips, together with Mr. Fowler's abstracts, remained in the custody of Mr. Ratcliff, and were for a time kept at the Public Record Office.

After the outbreak of war in 1939, and owing to imminent danger from bombing in the London area, Mr. Ratcliff removed from Dulwich to Torquay, taking with him, for purposes of safety, all the manuscript material relating to the Fines. But, as it happened, Torquay was not exempt from enemy action, though luckily the manuscripts were undamaged; and after another removal at the conclusion of hostilities, when he went to reside at Chichester, he sent the abstracts to me.

In view of the unusual conditions, and the difficulties that had to be surmounted, work on the Index, as might be expected, had made little progress. But Mr. Ratcliff's help, imparted with a kindness that never failed, could always be relied upon, and this led to a friendship that was highly prized. In the summer of 1947, the year before his lamented death, I received a touching and pressing invitation to visit him at Chichester, and the delightful days spent in his company will live in my memory. He was then, alas, suffering from eye trouble, and it was evident that he could not proceed with the Index. The matter, however, was uppermost in his thoughts, and it was a relief to him to be able to announce that Mr. A. C. Wood, M.C., M.A., his former colleague at the Public Record Office, had generously consented to act in his stead. Warm thanks are due to Mr. Wood for the care he has bestowed upon the Index, a labour of love for which generations of students will be grateful; and I hope he will allow me to acknowledge the very special debt that is owing to him. It is certainly fitting that he should as it were put the finishing touches to the work of his two predecessors and to a volume which forms their memorial.
